

Using the My Health Record System

For GPs and Specialists

The national My Health Record system, driven by the Australian Digital Health Agency, is an electronic summary of an individual's health information. It can be securely shared online between the individual and their healthcare providers involved, and may improve patient health outcomes.

In 2018, the My Health Record is moving to an opt-out model, which means all Australians will have a record by the end of 2018, unless they choose not to have one.

The information session will explore the features and functionalities, and benefits of the My Health Record, as they relate to GPs and specialists and detail the legislative requirements. This session will assist participant engagement with the system and help inform their patients of the benefits of the My Health Record system.

Presented by

Dr John Aloizos

Senior Clinical Reference Lead,
Australian Digital Health Agency

John is one of the early adopters of the My Health Record system and uses it on a daily basis. This is your opportunity to hear from John about his experience using the My Health Record system and how it benefits his patients.

Learning outcomes

By the end of this activity, participants will be able to:

- Describe features and benefits of the national My Health Record system
- Recognise consent obligations, legislation requirements (including medico-legal concerns) and security features in place, to protect the My Health Record system
- Discuss access controls built in to the My Health Record system with patients, to assist them to manage their key health information
- Utilise the My Health Record system in day-to-day practice to improve patient safety.
