Janine Wilson

Janine is an accomplished executive with 25 years' experience in the health sector, where she has held strategic, operational, marketing and general management roles. Since 2017 she has overseen the establishment and ongoing operation of Telstra Health's National Cancer Screening Register (NCSR), operated on behalf of the Commonwealth Department of Health and supporting screening for cervical and bowel cancer.

Prior to her tenure with Telstra Health, Janine held a number of executive roles with the Australian Red Cross Blood Service (now "Lifeblood"). As part of her leadership of the Australia-wide network of blood collection centres, she led significant transformation of the national workforce and introduced a new technology platform to facilitate an improved experience for blood donors.

Janine has experience in the American healthcare system, during her time as Director of Strategy for the New York Blood Center. She led the development and implementation of their 5 year strategic plan, as well as leading product development and working with the local hospital network to improve services.

Having trained as a physiotherapist, Janine started her professional life at St Vincent's Hospital in Melbourne, where she worked across the acute healthcare environment, rehabilitation, chronic health management and in intensive care.

Janine is passionate about improving e-health services for patients across the healthcare system, and in finding better ways to serve patients in a connected world.

Janine holds an MBA from Melbourne Business School, where she was the recipient of the Helen McPherson-Smith Scholarship.
