End of life care workshop

For clinicians, staff and volunteers who provide palliative and end of life care, carers and families.

End of life care is a well-recognised priority area, both nationally and locally with Australia's rate of dying at home being comparatively low compared with other similar OECD countries. Whilst acknowledging that people want to be able to die in their place of choice, there are numerous factors that preclude this from happening for a lot of people.

Event overview

This workshop will consider how many people die in their place of choice and for those that don't, the reasons why it doesn't happen. It will also form part of the investigation EMPHN are undertaking into understanding the barriers people have in dying in their place of choice and will help inform the co-design of potential solutions to ensure more people are supported in their choice of where they wish to die.

You will have the chance to tell us what can be improved in the end of life care service system and share your experiences with others.

An opportunity exists to become a representative on our end of life care working group (North East) after this event. We will be looking for a variety of members from consumers to service providers. Please fill in an expression of interest form or speak to one of our facilitators on the day.
